Q & A

Courtney Love

The singer, 50, guest stars on Fox's Empire

Why return to acting?

I'd gone back to rock and roll, which is much looser. But now that I'm the age that I am, the structure of an acting schedule is really appealing.

How did you end up on Empire?

I'd heard that [executive producer] Lee Daniels wanted to work with me, but I thought it was rude to reach out. [Eventually] I texted him, and two minutes later he called.

Do you like playing a rocker?

Back in the day, I wouldn't play rock stars or villains. I had some really stupid rules. But I was a kid.

(Contrary to reports, Martin Freeman, Sherlock’s Dr. Watson, wasn’t there, but Andrew Scott, who plays Moriarty, was, along with Thor’s Tom Hiddleston.) After a 45-minute ceremony, the newlyweds were whisked across the road for a reception at Mottistone Manor, a 650-acre historic estate once owned by the bride’s relatives. Among the treats: a Sicilian lemon sorbet topped with champagne from Minghella Ice Cream. The morning after the nuptials, Cumberbatch, 38, and Hunter, 36, gathered their friends and family for a postwedding brunch at the Sun Inn pub in Hulverstone. Then the couple jetted to L.A. for a brief honeymoon in the States before the Oscars on Feb. 22. A Best Actor nominee for The Imitation Game, Cumberbatch will step later

Weeks after tragedy struck Whitney

AND THEIR ENDURING FRIENDSHIP

You've known each other for 40 years. Any idea you'd be doing this for so long?

Catherine: I had no idea I'd be alive, let alone working again with my dear friend!

Eugene: It's nice to be working period, but it's pretty amazing. I've known her since she was 18, when we were working at the Second City theater in Toronto.

You've played a married couple a lot—do you ever really feel like one?

Catherine: I would love to think we continue to challenge each other, like a good married couple would do.

Eugene: But we don't really argue. I'm not into confrontation.

But you once dated in real life?

Catherine: Everybody tried dating each other at Second City! When you're laughing with each other, it's really sexy. You think, 'Oh, we should date!' Nothing lasted. Except Eugene met his wife, Deb, at that theater.

Eugene: And that worked out in a big way.

Tell us about starring as a rich couple who lose all their money in your new sitcom Schitt's Creek.

Eugene: My son Daniel came to me with the idea for the show. Catherine was my first choice, and I'm just thrilled she said yes.

LADY GAGA & TAYLOR KINNEY ENGAGED!

Mother Monster is off the market! "He gave me his heart on Valentine's Day, and I said YES!" Lady Gaga captioned a Feb. 16 Instagram photo (inset) of a heart-shaped rock on that finger, confirming her engagement to Chicago Fire's Taylor Kinney, 33. "He is the right guy," Gaga, 28, told Howard Stern in December. "I have that feeling. I just know it." That feeling began on the set of the singer's 2011 "You and I" video, which costarred Kinney. "We complement each other's weirdness," she told Ellen DeGeneres. "That's actually one of the first things he ever said to me. It's a Dr. Seuss quote. You find in someone else a compatible weirdness." —JEFF NELSON

THE SINGER OF 'TAKE ME TO CHURCH' HOZIER

You can't turn on the radio these days without hearing the 24-year-old Irish singer's infectious hit "Take Me to Church." But Hozier, who's currently on a sold-out U.S. tour, can't believe all of the attention. "I never thought that it would make its way onto radio and the charts," he says about the Song of the Year-nominated hit he performed at the Grammys on Feb. 8 (see inset). "It wasn't part of its design. I've been very fortunate." The alt-folk musician—born Andrew Hozier-Byrne—developed a love for music listening to his drummer dad's soul and jazz records. At one point he came close to being a pop star but decided to sharpen his skills at local gigs instead: "I had a chance to do some demos, but they wanted me to be more of a singer of the X Factor variety. I didn't feel comfortable with it. I wanted to be a songwriter." The result: music that isn't afraid to take on the controversial. "It's about sex,"

Hozier says about his breakout single, whose video depicts the discrimination of a gay couple. "I grew up in a society where a lot of values were inherited from the Catholic Church, and its doctrine teaches people to be ashamed of those aspects about themselves. But lovemaking is a very human, wonderful thing to do." While his own love life will have to wait until things settle down ("I'll be living out of a suitcase for the next year"), he's finally made peace with his rapid rise: "I've just now learned to accept it and enjoy it. This is a dream."

—GILLIAN TELLING

"To meet icons is terrifying but fantastic," says Hozier of jamming with Annie Lennox at the Grammys. Right: In '09 he rocked short hair.

Rec-ing crew (clockwise from

Scott, Chris Pratt,
Nick Offerman,
Aubrey Plaza and Amy Poehler.

No. 1 Parks and Recreation

It takes a village—and Amy Poehler—to make a comedy destined to be cherished

TV COMEDY Poehler's sitcom has never been perfect, but no sitcoms are. What matters is that few are so gently insightful about how human failings (notably pride and spite) can be just as stimulating as they are irritating—more so if you live in a community where the greatest source of pixilation is the sugar in a candy brand called Sweetums. Parks found cuteness even in Offerman's Ron Swanson, a Hemingwayesque libertarian who codified his machismo into the Pyramid of Greatness. In Parks' final season, the town of Pawnee has leaped to the year 2017, allowing lots of small jokes about the near future. But nothing really changes: This will always be the place where a miniature horse, Li'l Sebastian, was a celebrity. And where this same horse's death was commemorated with an eternal flame. Light one for Parks. (NBC, series finale Feb. 24, 10 p.m.)

No. 2 The DUFF

School smarty is dragged to the party

MOVIE

COMEDY Think of this as the high school movie Janeane Garofalo never made. Bianca (Mae Whitman) is horrified to learn that, among her circle, she's supposedly the designated ugly fat friend (DUFF). The realization sends her to hot jock Wesley (Robbie Amell) for a popularity makeover. The DUFF is no Breakfast Club, but the clichéd setup is boosted by the stars' genuine likability. The movie also makes you wish Whitman were a busier actress. (Feb. 20, PG-13)

Amell and Whitman form their own teen clique.

No. 3 Bosch AMAZON DRAMA

Titus

Welliver (The Good Wife) stars in a terrific adaptation of Michael Connelly's books about an Army vet turned homicide detective in L.A. Bosch throws himself into a case involving a dead boy, romances a rookie cop (Annie Wersching of 24) and regards this mean, messy world with Welliver's inimitable, dead-level gaze. (Available on Amazon Prime Instant Video.)

An overgrown boy and his stogie-loving dog.

No. 4 The Jack and Triumph Show

COMEDY Jack McBrayer

TV (30 Rock) and Triumph, the grotesque, insult-barking dog puppet, team up for this mock sitcom about an ex-child star and his faithful friend—faithful and eager to lead Master back to showbiz and all his old vices (hustling, for one). It's like Ted, except that Triumph is amoral to the core. If there's ever a fire, he won't find a hydrant and think rescue. (Adult Swim, Feb. 20, 11:30 p.m.)

Energizer.com/ecoadvanced

No. 5 Rhiannon Giddens, Tomorrow Is My Turn

A gorgeous voice worth hearing today

MUSIC

ALTERNATE On her first solo album, Giddens sends her voice soaring, diving and soaring again through all kinds of songs, from the Nina Simone title track to Dolly Parton's "Don't Let It Trouble Your Mind." Giddens is theatrical, but she never steamrolls a lyric, not even a whimsical line from "Shake Sugaree": "I'm going to heaven in a brown pea shell." She well could.

It's always stormy leather: Damon Runyan (center) joins the Vagos gang in California.

No. 6 Gangland Undercover

On the road, but not in cahoots, with a nasty band of motorcycle outlaws

TV DRAMA The hunt is on for the show to replace Sons of Anarchy. In other words, Son of Sons of Anarchy. Based on the memoir of Charles Falco, a federal informant who infiltrated the Vagos motorcycle gang, Undercover isn't it—Anarchy had a grander sense of mission about taking us on a ride to hell—but the premiere is stylish without sacrificing grubbiness, and Damon Runyan is a good Charlie: Tough but worn, he looks like a man not unfamiliar with the thought of winding up roadkill. At the least, Undercover reiterates the lesson of Pee-wee's Big Adventure: Never touch a gang member's bike. (History, Feb. 24, 10 p.m.)

No. 7 Matt and Kim, 'Hey Now'

MUSIC POP Indie darlings Matt and Kim return with this bouncy single (off their upcoming fifth album, New Glow, due out April 7). The "hey now, hey now" chorus is as infectious as it is elemental, and the song's marching-band vibe makes the best use of brassy horns and booming bass drum since Taylor Swift's "Shake It Off."

No. 8 The Voice

TV REALITY Over the past year or so people have questioned why the NBC hit, now starting season 8, hasn't produced a winner with major commercial follow-through. Do we fault the mother bird if her hatchling learns to fly then never wings it farther than one tree over? Well, we shouldn't. The fun of The Voice is the process—the teamsmanship and competition among the coaches (including Christina Aguilera and Blake Shelton) and the contestants. Hits? Let them come, or not. (NBC, Feb. 23, 8 p.m.)

Christina Aguilera returns to coach and inspire the hopefuls.

If You Bought an Airline Ticket between the U.S. and Asia, Australia, New Zealand, or the Pacific Islands,

You Could Receive Benefits from Class Action Settlements

Settlements have been reached with eight airlines in a class action lawsuit involving the price of airline tickets. The Settling Defendants are: Air France; Cathay Pacific; Japan Airlines; Malaysian Airlines; Qantas; Singapore Airlines; Thai Airways; and Vietnam Airlines.

The lawsuit continues against five Non-Settling Defendant airlines: Air New Zealand; All Nippon Airways ("ANA"); China Airlines (Taiwan); EVA Airways; and Philippines Airlines.

What is the case about?

The lawsuit claims that the Defendants agreed to fix prices on tickets for transpacific air travel. As a result, ticket purchasers may have paid more than was necessary. The Settling Defendants deny the allegations, and deny that they have any liability. The Defendant airlines also deny liability, although ANA has pled guilty to fixing the prices of certain discounted tickets.

Am I included?

You are included if: (1) you bought a ticket for air travel from one of 26 airlines; (2) the ticket included at least one flight segment between the U.S. and Asia or Oceania; and (3) your purchase was made between January 1, 2000 and the present. A more complete description of eligibility requirements is available at the website or by calling the toll-free number.

What do the Settlements provide?

The Settling Defendants have agreed to pay $39,502,000 (the "Settlement Fund"). Money will not be distributed yet, and will be distributed pursuant to a Plan of Allocation approved by the Court. Additional information is available on the website below. Class Counsel will pursue the lawsuit against the Non-Settling Defendants.

Class Counsel have not requested attorneys' fees and reimbursement of costs at this time but will do so in connection with the final approval hearing. For the current Settlements, Class Counsel will request up to one-third of the Settlement Fund plus up to $7,500 for each of the class representatives. Class Counsel has asked the Court to set aside an additional $3 million of the Settlement Fund to cover future expenses.

How can I get benefits?

Submit a Claim Form online or by mail. The earliest deadline to file a claim is September 19, 2015, but you will have until 120 days after the Settlements become final and effective to file your claim.

What are my rights?

If you do nothing, you will be bound by the Settlements and the Court's decisions. If you want to keep your right to sue the Settling Defendants you must exclude yourself from the classes by April 17, 2015. If you stay in the classes, you may object to the Settlements by April 17, 2015. The Court will hold a hearing on May 22, 2015 to consider whether to approve the Settlements. You or your own lawyer may appear at the hearing at your own expense, but you do not have to attend.

No. 9 Chris Brown and Tyga, Fan of a Fan: The Album

The meeting of R&B and rap makes for a catchy collaboration

MUSIC HIP-HOP Brown and Tyga first teamed up in 2010 for their Fan of a Fan mixtape (which spawned Hot 100 hit "Deuces" with Kevin McCall). After several delays, the follow-up has finally arrived. This time around, the duo snagged some impressive guest spots in T.I. and 50 Cent. But the standouts here are lead single "Ayo" (Brown's smooth vocals make for an inescapably hooky chorus) and "Nothin' Like Me." The latter, featuring Ty Dolla $ign, comes across like an expletive-laced "A Whole New World." The guys vie for a woman—they could show her the world in Range Rovers and private jets!—over a beat courtesy of producer DJ Mustard. (Feb. 24)

No. 10 SNL APP COMEDY

If you felt frustrated by Saturday Night Live's very long 40th-anniversary special—vintage clips were served up thinly sliced and on the side, like coleslaw—the show's nicely designed new app will get you laughing again. There are hundreds of hours of footage here, including George Carlin's monologue from the very first night (Oct. 11, 1975), Nasim Pedrad's nasal, whinnying Kim Kardashian and oddball skits waiting to be rediscovered. How did we forget Kristen Wiig's Virginia Hosen, hot-air-balloon guide and Pony Express deliverywoman? (Free download on iTunes)

No. 11 What We Do in the Shadows MOVIE

HORROR/COMEDY As vampires go, these guys truly suck. Far from mysterious or sexy, undead roomies Vladislav (Flight of the Conchords' Jemaine Clement), Deacon (Jonathan Brugh) and Viago (Taika Waititi, who directed this funny film with Clement) share chores, go clubbing and try to date. With dry humor—at least until the blood gushes—they prove that even for the immortal, social awkwardness never dies. (Not rated, in theaters)

Waititi flashes a toothy grin as a campy vamp.

Laura Lippman's 12th Monaghan mystery, a novel about new motherhood and a romance set in Emily Dickinson's hometown. EDITED BY KIM HUBBARD

WEEK

Elisa Albert After Birth

NOVEL Faculty wife and new mom Ari's idea of work-life balance is being just as sick of her dissertation as she is of her maternal obligations. Then a pregnant indie-rock legend moves to town. Can commiserating with her girl crush cure Ari's postpartum depression? Albert's scathing send-up of modern motherhood boils with dark humor and brutal honesty.

William Nicholson Amherst

NOVEL Alice has come to Emily Dickinson's hometown to research a screenplay about the long affair between the poet's brother Austin and Mabel Todd, a professor's wife. Soon life tips its hat to art: Alice herself enters into an affair. Nicholson deftly weaves Mabel's story with Alice's, shedding light on the timeless longing, lust and loneliness of love.

Laura Lippman Hush, Hush

MYSTERY Lippman's PI Tess Monaghan is back, this time called in to assess security needs for the notorious Melisandre Harris Dawes. Tess, now a mom, isn't happy about working with Dawes, who pled insanity after she left her infant to die in a hot car 12 years earlier. Then a new killing enters the picture, and things get even dicier. Lippman juggles lots of moving parts, but Tess's brash honesty, especially about the messiness of motherhood, keeps the action real and riveting.

Muslim Students Shot Over a Parking Space?

Families and friends of the three slain North Carolina college students want the murders treated as possible hate crimes

Craig Stephen Hicks, 46, of Chapel Hill, N.C., has been indicted on three counts of first-degree murder in the Feb. 10 deaths of Deah Shaddy Barakat, 23, his wife, Yusor Mohammad Abu-Salha, 21, and her sister Razan Mohammad Abu-Salha, 19. So far, police and the suspect's wife say the shooting near the University of North Carolina's Chapel Hill campus grew out of a parking dispute. But the victims' families have alleged that Hicks targeted his neighbors because of their Muslim faith—and they want the deaths treated as hate crimes. (At a Feb. 11 news conference, Hicks's wife, Karen, insisted her husband "believed . . . everyone is equal. It doesn't matter what you look like or who you are or what you believe.") For now, the incident remains under review. "Whether it's a hate crime or not doesn't really change the fact. . . . Murder is the worst charge you can get in North Carolina," Chapel Hill Police Lt. Joshua Mecimore tells PEOPLE. "We're still in the very early stages of this investigation."

Remembering American ISIS Hostage Kayla Mueller

The U.S. aid worker and activist died while in captivity in the Middle East

One family's long nightmare came to a tragic end on Feb. 10 when relatives of Kayla Mueller—the 26-year-old American aid worker held hostage by ISIS since August 2013—confirmed that the Arizona native had died in the Middle East. (The circumstances remain unclear; ISIS has said she was killed during a Jordanian air strike.) “At a young age, she knew her [humanitarian] calling,” Kayla’s aunt Lori Lyon said, according to The Guardian.

“The world grieves with us.” Her boyfriend, Omar Alkhani—who was captured along with Mueller and reportedly attempted to rescue her once he’d been released by ISIS—has also spoken out. “I’m not writing . . . to say goodbye, this is a thank you,” he posted on Facebook. “Thank you for coming into my life.”

I was very lucky because my mother was the first to ask, “What do you need regarding birth control, condoms, the pill?” But in college, I saw how many women didn’t have someone to talk to or the resources to get birth control—and Planned Parenthood became that place. It’s been 42 years since Roe v. Wade, and there is still a nonstop attack on a woman’s right to choose and make decisions about her body. What I love about Planned Parenthood is it is focused on destigmatizing abortion and birth control. A huge part of Girls is an attempt to shift the stigma around women talking about their sexuality. Women are ashamed of things that were in their past—I don’t want that to be the case anymore.

CBS Plans Tribute to Bob Simon

Colleagues mourn the beloved 60 Minutes star

When Bob Simon left his N.Y.C. office on Feb. 11, the 60 Minutes correspondent was "on top of the world," says CBS colleague Lesley Stahl. The veteran journalist had just finished his Feb. 15 piece—a report on Ebola he was working on with daughter and show producer Tanya Simon—when the town car he was riding in struck another car, killing the 73-year-old. "It's just terrible," Stahl tells PEOPLE. "None of us can believe it." Simon began his lengthy career in the 1960s, covering major overseas stories from the Vietnam War to the disaster in Fukushima, Japan. "Bob Simon was the best writer, in my opinion, working in broadcast news," wrote correspondent Anderson Cooper. "I have admired him from the time I was a kid watching CBS News." While the network will dedicate the Feb. 22 program to Simon's career, his close friends and coworkers continue to mourn his sudden death. Says Stahl: "He had courage, heart, and he was just really fun to be with."

INSIDE THE
AMERICAN SNIPER TRIAL

CHRIS KYLE'S FINAL HOURS

IN TEARFUL TESTIMONY, KYLE'S WIDOW, TAYA, REVEALS THEIR LAST MOMENTS TOGETHER—AND A POLICE VIDEO SHOWS EDDIE RAY ROUTH'S CHILLING CONFESSION: 'I DON'T KNOW WHAT I WAS THINKING'

Taya Kyle has vowed to be in the Stephenville, Texas, courtroom every day of the murder trial of Eddie Ray Routh, the ex-Marine who killed her husband, Chris Kyle. She has sat through gut-wrenching testimony about the crime scene, where Chris was found facedown in the dirt with six bullet wounds, listened to Routh's voice-mail messages for her husband—"Hey, brother, give me a shout, man," he said on Jan. 28, 2013—and testified tearfully as she recalled her final exchange with her husband, whose 2012 autobiography inspired the Oscar-nominated film American Sniper: "We said we loved each other and kissed and hugged like we always did." On Feb. 16 she watched as Routh confessed on tape to the Feb. 2, 2013, killings of Chris and his friend Chad Littlefield, both of whom had taken Routh to a shooting range in an effort to help him cope with his alleged post-traumatic stress disorder. "I don't know what I was thinking," Routh says in the chilling video, which was recorded hours after the murders. "I guess there needs to be more thinking in the world than hurting people."

For Taya, 40, revisiting the circumstances surrounding her husband's tragic death at age 38 has been a grueling ordeal. She has made no secret of her feelings about Routh's use of the insanity defense, which is expected to include the claim that he was suffering from PTSD. "To try and even find an excuse is disgusting," she told the Los Angeles Times in January. "I know people with PTSD, and it's very real and very hard. But it doesn't change your core character."

As the trial presses on, prosecutors have painted a portrait of Routh, 27, as troubled and insecure. "I shot them because they wouldn't talk to me," he said of Kyle and Littlefield after his arrest, according to testimony by former Erath County deputy Gene Cole: "[He said], 'I was just riding in the back-seat of the truck and nobody would talk to me.'" In the stunning video confession, Routh admits to using marijuana the day of the shootings and says he knows what he did was wrong—a key distinction for the jury of 10 women

A WIDOW'S PAIN

"I'm not nervous, I'm just emotional," Taya testified on Feb. 11. She described Chris as a "charismatic person."

'It's an extension of your heart to be willing to take something on like that. It's not an easy job'

—TAYA KYLE ON CHRIS'S SKILL AS A SNIPER

Details of Chris's Last Day

Early morning: Chris and Taya attend Saturday sports events with their kids.

Mid-morning: The two say goodbye as Chris prepares to meet Routh and Littlefield (below). "We were both in a hurry," Taya testified.

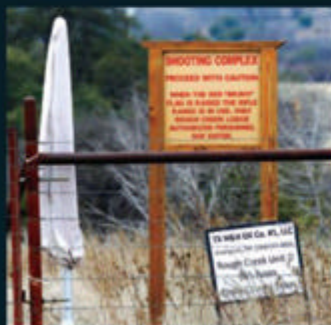

3:07 p.m.: In a brief phone call, Taya notices her husband seems unusually tense. "Are you okay?" she asked, and he replied, "Yep." "It was short, like, 'I wish I could say more,'" she testified.

3:15 p.m.: Chris and Littlefield arrive with Routh at the gun range at the Rough Creek Lodge in Glen Rose, Texas (bottom).

Around 4:45 p.m.: The bodies of Chris and Littlefield are found by guide Justin Nabours. Both men had been shot multiple times, with several "rapidly fatal" injuries.

Evening: Police inform Taya that her husband is dead. "I said, 'Is there any way you're wrong?'" she told PEOPLE.

THE ACCUSED

Routh (in court on Feb. 11 and in his 2013 mug shot) told police "he'd taken a couple of souls," said Lt. Michael Smith.

and two men. Still, "there are different types of 'know'"—including "surface knowledge"—explains George Parnham, a noted Houston criminal-defense attorney. "Surface knowledge is being able to recite the words 'I know what I did was wrong' but not appreciating what the words mean."

Defense attorneys say Routh was an anguished veteran suffering from "severe psychosis" whom doctors had previously deemed likely to cause harm to himself or others. His uncle James Watson testified that after Routh was discharged from the Marines, "I noticed that he just kind of lost his desire for life."

When his mother, who worked at the school the two Kyle children attended, asked Chris for help with her son, he agreed. But soon after meeting Routh on the morning of Feb. 2, 2013, he and Littlefield, 35—who, like Chris, "had a passion for helping veterans," as Littlefield's mom, Judy, testified—felt uneasy. "This dude is straight up nuts," Chris texted Chad on the drive to the Rough Creek Lodge, to which Chad replied, "He's right behind me. Watch my 6" (military jargon for "watch my back").

Those who arrived first at the crime scene offered a horrific account. "This was a brutal killing," testified Texas Ranger Danny Briley. "You know when you have this number of gunshots on a body—you can't accidentally shoot someone that many times. It just doesn't happen."

After the killings, Routh drove through Taco Bell in Chris's black Ford F-350 and stopped at the home of Watson, who testified that his nephew said, "I'm driving a dead man's truck." He was captured a few hours later after leading police on a high-speed chase. In his confession he alternated between remorse—"I'm just sorry for what I've done"—and ramblings. When asked about meeting Kyle, he said, "It seems like every time I talk to a man named Chris, I end up talking to the wolf. The ones in the sky and the ones that lie." He also bragged about his superior shooting skills: "His training was good, but my training had been better my whole life."

Prosecutors have waived the death penalty in the case, and if Routh is found not guilty by reason of insanity—a defense that is rarely successful—he will be sent to a mental-health facility. For Taya a guilty verdict is the only one that will bring justice. "We all suffer. It's part of life," she wrote in a Valentine's Day Facebook post. "The blessing is, while evil exists, divinity does too—and it is stronger."

Just two months away from delivering Baby No. 2, Princess Kate has gone from barely there to blooming!

She's still not wearing many maternity dresses, but as Princess Kate sails into her third trimester with Royal Baby No. 2, all eyes are on her burgeoning bump. Kate, 33, showed off her new silhouette in an ivory wool Max Mara coat as she helped paint a mural in Portsmouth Feb. 12. "She's managed to stay looking dainty while showing little sign of the swollen ankles or puffy faces that plague many mums-to-be," says Cathy Ranson, the editor in chief of Netmums, one of the U.K.'s top parenting sites. And while her bump is similar in size to that in her first pregnancy with Prince George, "I think she's carrying a bit wider," says Zita West, a pregnancy expert and midwife whose client list includes actress Kate Winslet and Prince William's aunt Sophie Wessex. But she cautions against speculation that that means Kate's carrying a girl. "It's nonsense," she says. "There is absolutely no way of determining the sex just from analyzing the bump!"

In any case, like the last time, Kate is making the last stretch of her pregnancy look as easy as the first part was hard. Much of her third trimester, in fact, has been devoted to working with charities that deal with children's mental-health issues. "She wants to get to grips with what the real issues are," says Dr. John Ivens, head teacher at the Bethlem and Maudsley Hospital School in southeast London, which Kate visited Feb. 10. "She wants to . . . use her position for their good."

Living together “is a learning process,” says Ben (at home with

SCENES FROM A MARRIAGE
Since their Nov. 1 wedding (above), the Seewalds have enjoyed time at home together.

Some things about married life just take getting used to. For many newlyweds, learning to share space with another person is one of them. But for Jessa Duggar Seewald, it's sharing with only one other person that's the tough part. "One thing I've had to adjust to," she says, snuggled up with her husband, Ben, on a love seat in their cozy Springdale, Ark., home, "is not having my siblings around—especially my sisters, because we are so close. I thought it would be hard, missing my family, but I didn't know how special those sister bonds are." She pauses and gives Ben a quick, tight squeeze. "But I am so happy to be married to you."

However much she misses her sprawling family, Jessa, 22, who rose to fame as one of the more outspoken of TLC's 19 Kids & Counting, is blissfully charting a new course with Ben, 19. The couple's ultraconservative courtship (no kissing until marriage, hand-holding until engagement or PDA beyond "side-hugs") was chronicled on the series, which premieres its ninth season Feb. 17, and more than 1,000 guests attended their wedding at the First Baptist Church in nearby Bentonville. And when the pair decided not to seal their union with a kiss at the altar but instead did so in private, it became national news. "I didn't think it would be that big of a deal," says Jessa. "This was our first kiss, and we'd never done it before. We didn't want to be a specta-

"We are so excited, as we have watched Ben and Jessa join their lives together," says Michelle. "As parents, it thrills our hearts." Adds Jessa: "I'm so happy I get to be married to this man and spend every day with him."

cle." Adds Ben: "We wanted people to see the spiritual part of marriage and not be so focused on critiquing our kissing."

Marrying into a famous clan means facing scrutiny—something that Jessa, the third daughter of Jim Bob, 49, and Michelle Duggar, 48, is

Thanks to millions of viewers, the Duggars are used to having every aspect of their lives scrutinized—and they don't flinch at controversy. The family is unabashed about their views on birth control (the senior Duggars say they leave the number of children they have "up to God" and are open to having still more), homeschooling (all the Duggar children were taught at home), finance (they believe in staying completely debt-free) and faith (they follow a strict fundamentalist Christian doctrine). Those are beliefs Ben and Jessa fully embrace and express on social media. Last June Ben posted a photo of Jessa wielding an automatic rifle on Facebook, captioned #Don'tmesswithJessa, and in September, after visiting the Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C., Jessa compared Hitler's genocide to abortion in an Instagram post. The comments were lambasted by critics, but she is unbowed. Hot-button social media messages are mixed in with a blend of Bible verses, smoothie recipes and playful couple shots. "Our faith is the core of our lives," she explains. "If that's what I believe, it is a free country. I should be able to get on social media and say what I think. If you don't like it, click unfollow."

Away from the spotlight—and their social feeds—the Seewalds are in many ways like other newly married couples, nesting in Springdale, minutes away from Jessa's parents' house and about 30 miles away from her sister Jill, 23, who is expecting her first baby with husband Derick Dillard, 25, in weeks (see sidebar). After a 10-day European honeymoon in Paris, Rome and Venice, the pair moved into a two-bedroom, one-bath house owned by Jessa's grandmother Mary Duggar and remodeled by the family. Ben, who works doing house repairs and maintenance for Jim Bob, has finished a college associate's degree and is now considering going to a seminary and possibly becoming the pastor of his own church. "Working for my father-in-law is not too bad," Ben says. "He's a good boss.

That Sexy Kiss: Nothing to Be Shy About

➔ The very first time Ben and Jessa kissed, it was in private, away from the guests at their wedding. Days later, the bride posted a lip-lock on Instagram that irked some conservative Christians. The Seewalds stand by the sensuous shot. "People made a big deal of us not kissing at the wedding," says Jessa. "So we put this out there." Her parents, Jim Bob and Michelle, posted a kiss of their own in support. Adds Ben: "It was innocent."

Working with friends and brothers-in-law is fun; we're pretty close." Being part of the family business is "not as common as it used to be," says Jessa, "but I think it is really cool and builds tight family bonds."

Not surprisingly, starting a family of their own is something they discussed early and often. Perhaps more surprisingly, so was adoption. "Even before we were married, we wanted to adopt," says Jessa, who has described herself as a "bit of a nonconformist" in her family. Recently the couple explored beginning the process and discovered they had to be married for two years before moving forward with bringing a child home. They also want to have biological children. "We hope to adopt a lot of kids," says Jessa. "If God blesses us with biological kids of our own, it's not going to quench our desire to adopt." Adds Ben: "Kids are so important."

Although the Internet is buzzing with rumors about a baby on the way, the Seewalds insist Jessa is not pregnant yet but know their reproductive future is something that millions of fans—and some of their siblings—are relentlessly curious about. At a recent visit back at her parents' home, Jessa was faced with hard questions from little sister Jordyn, 6. "She asked if I was pregnant, and I said, 'No, I'm not,'" Jessa says. "And then she said, 'Well, you look pregnant!'" Ben laughs as his wife cringes. "We fight about this. Jessa thinks she's fat, but she doesn't remember all the times people tell her that she looks great. And her sister is used to people in the family getting married and being pregnant right away. Of course she's going to look at Jessa and say she's pregnant."

Not everything about living together has been harmonious, but Ben says he and Jessa "try not to argue." When disagreements arise, "we try to bring it up and say, 'Hey, we need to talk about this.' We can't let it define our relationship." A typical squabble? The classic debate over how best to squeeze a tube of toothpaste. "I can get the toothpaste on my toothbrush without making a mess," says Jessa. "And there is all this gunked-up toothpaste around the top of the tube, and I was like, how did this happen? Oh, yeah, I share a tube of toothpaste with this man." The pair go back and forth about their bathroom battle until they get the giggles and kiss. "It's not really arguing," Ben says. His wife agrees: "It's just doing things differently. You have to get used to it."

If it all sounds too good to be true, remember that the Seewalds have only been married for three months. But they seem determined to practice what they preach for the long haul. "Ben is a very sensitive guy, and he looks out for my feelings," says Jessa. Recently Ben cooked his wife dinner and served her a love letter with the meal. "Your smile brightens my spirit," he wrote, "like the first gleams of sunrise after a crisp autumn night in the Arkansas Ozarks." And if his beliefs tell him he's the head of the household, there's no question that Ben puts Jessa on a pedestal. "I try to put myself in her shoes and really feel what she is feeling. I try to make that my perspective, that I'm here to help. If she's happy, I'm happy."

INSIDE THEIR HAPPY NEW HOME
1. Knickknacks from their European honeymoon are on display. 2. Bible study is important to the new couple, who started their own community Bible group.
3. Mr. & Mrs. pillows decorate the master bedroom.
4. Wedding pictures, along with art created by their siblings (they have 24 total), fill the living room.

Make Way for More Duggars

➔ With Jessa's sister Jill (right) and her husband, Derick Dillard, expecting a baby boy in the next few weeks, the clan (above) is prepping for another addition. The Dillards are planning to have a home birth. "Our birth team is our midwives and Jana," says Jill, who is also a midwife. Who will be the next Duggar to wed? Fans speculate that oldest twins Jana and John-David, 25, will be the next to tie the knot. But while rumors of a Jana romance with football star Tim Tebow are false, Ben is ready to make that hookup happen just for the family football advantage alone: "He'd be great on my team."

The oldest of seven kids born to Michael and Guinn Seewald of Hot Springs, Ark., Ben was raised in a strict Baptist home, homeschooled and outspoken about his beliefs before he and Jessa began courting. Now that they are married, the couple study the Bible together and say they aren't afraid to challenge aspects of the theology they grew up with. "It is good to realize your parents had wisdom, but they might not always be right," Ben says. "We are looking at what we believe ourselves and doing a lot of studying about it." They are also trying to figure out how to maintain their faith and navigate the modern world. The pair are discussing whether to buy a TV, something absent in the Duggar household despite reality-television stardom. "We don't have a television right now," Ben says. "But we might get one eventually, to watch football games or a cooking show every now and then." When they want home entertainment, the pair do watch classic sitcoms and old movies on a computer—reruns of The Andy Griffith Show are favorites. They listen to Christian music but are open to other genres, says Ben, "as long as the lyrics encourage and uplift us." The Seewalds don't "Humility and putting the other person above yourself is key," Ben says.

They aren't afraid of controversy. But, says Ben, they post "for the right reasons."

drink or smoke, but they don't judge. "The Bible doesn't say these things are sinful," says Ben. They keep to Duggar rules about budgeting but aren't afraid of a little splurge. "Ben takes me out on dates," says Jessa. The pair like to hit the local ice-cream parlor—and while that may be old-fashioned, they're determined to make their own way. "We got a lot of advice from people about relationships," says Ben. "But we have to learn on our own." ●

MOVIE

He Turned Migrant Kids into Champions

JIM WHITE TRANSFORMED HIS SMALL TOWN
BY COACHING YOUNG MEN TO RUN FAST AND DREAM BIG. NOW HOLLYWOOD IS TELLING HIS INSPIRING STORY By JOHNNY DODD

Jim White retired from coaching cross-country at McFarland High School more than a decade ago, but he still shows up for practice plenty of afternoons, pedaling his bicycle alongside the team as they run through the central California town's dusty streets and out into fields lined with orchards and vegetables. "I try and give the kids the best I can," says White, 73, "and I expect them to give me their best."

That approach helped make history: During White's two decades as coach, the McFarland High team—composed mainly of the children of immigrant farmworkers—won an unprecedented nine state championships. With each win, White and his star runners opened the door for hundreds of kids to dream of bigger things than picking almonds and avocados. "I never set out to leave a legacy," says White, whose story inspired the new movie McFarland, USA, starring Kevin Costner. "I just wanted to make a difference."

MORE THAN A COACH

"I always treated these kids like they were my own kids," says White, who shuttled his runners to practice in his old pickup (left). Below: In 1987 the underdog team became state champs. Far left: White with current and 1987 team members.

He did. Known affectionately as "Blanco" among his students—most of whom spent summers and weekends working the fields alongside their parents—White first came up with the idea of starting a cross-country team in 1980 after noticing the natural talent of several of his high schoolers. Before long coaching became a year-round endeavor, and he could often be found paying for running shoes and even food for his cash-strapped runners. "He would dish out more money than what the school was paying him," says former student Danny Diaz, 43, who is now a high school counselor. "He was coaching 365 days a year."

In between the workouts and long miles, White would drill—and still does—a simple mantra into their heads. "I tell them, 'Attitude is everything,'" he says. His runners see him as more than a coach. "He was a father figure," recalls former team member Johnny Samaniego, 42, who now coaches the girls' basketball team for the school. "He was the first person to take me to a bowling alley, a pizza parlor or to the movies."

White's motivational philosophy has had a profound effect on generations of locals. "A lot of us wanted to aspire to be like him," says Diaz. "He put the footprints where we should follow."

But White considers his former students the true champions. McFarland Mayor Manuel Cantu recently chatted with White about plans for a plaque honoring the team's achievements. "The only problem was that Jim didn't want his name on it," recalls Cantu. "He told me, 'I want the kids to have the credit. They're the ones who ran.'" ●

A New Kid's New Life

THE FORMER TEEN IDOL FINDS HIS GROOVE, REUNITING WITH HIS BAND AND TAKING HIS LONGTIME BOYFRIEND ON AN AMAZING RACE

Knight (above, front, with NKOTB in 1989) will hit the road with the band May 1 and competes with Rodriguez (right) on The Amazing Race, premiering Feb. 25 on CBS.

Jonathan Knight was once a world-famous teen pinup. But in 1994 the member of New Kids on the Block traded show business for a quiet life in his native Massachusetts. "I never thought we were going to blow up like we did," says the 46-year-old. "I just thought, 'Eh, this isn't so much for me.' It's the inside joke that I'm the reluctant rock star."

Things changed in 2008, when Knight, who built a career in real estate, decided to reunite with his bandmates, younger brother Jordan, Donnie Wahlberg, Joey McIntyre and Danny Wood. NKOTB's older but still rabid fans loved it, and this summer the group will tour with TLC and Nelly. "When we were kids we would fight each other—it was bad!" he recalls. "Now we've been through life. I think this is going to be our best tour yet."

His personal life is also flourishing. Recently Knight, who is openly gay, and Harley Rodriguez—a Barry's Bootcamp instructor he met through friends seven years ago—traveled the world as Amazing Race contestants. "I never would have done something like that a few years ago," says the singer, who once suffered from panic attacks. He credits Rodriguez, 41, with helping him find confidence. "A relationship grounds you—I don't care what people think anymore." Knight hasn't ruled out starting a family, but "I may have missed the boat," he says, "though I'm seeing more older parents." Meanwhile he's keeping the door open to new adventures: "I've decided 2015 is the year I live outside the box."

Do people ever get hurt in bondage play? Sometimes, but only if they don't know what they're doing.

"I know somebody who was tied up in such a way that it caused nerve damage," says Allena Gabosch, a longtime S&M educator. "It's pretty rare, though."

The most you're going to see is some bruising, which is a sign we had a good time." Sex-toy injuries have doubled in the U.S. since 2007, with the biggest increase after Fifty Shades of Grey was first published in 2011. The most common type of injury? Foreign-body removal. Ouch!

Do dominants and submissives really sign contracts?

Yes! Some do. "It's a way of creating mutual consent," Will Fredericks, a real-life dominant from Seattle, tells PEOPLE. Of course, a contract is more for fun than anything else. "They're not real in the legal sense," he says. "Rather it's awesome foreplay. Imagine having flirty conversations with your prospective lover about how you like to be played with. It's pretty hot."

Increase in sales of bondage toys at N.Y.C. store Babeland since Feb. 1

How did the movie get an R rating?

There's no full-frontal nudity, and the sex scenes skimp on thrusting—the MPAA typically allows only a few seconds before slapping on an NC-17.

What did the movie change from the book and why?

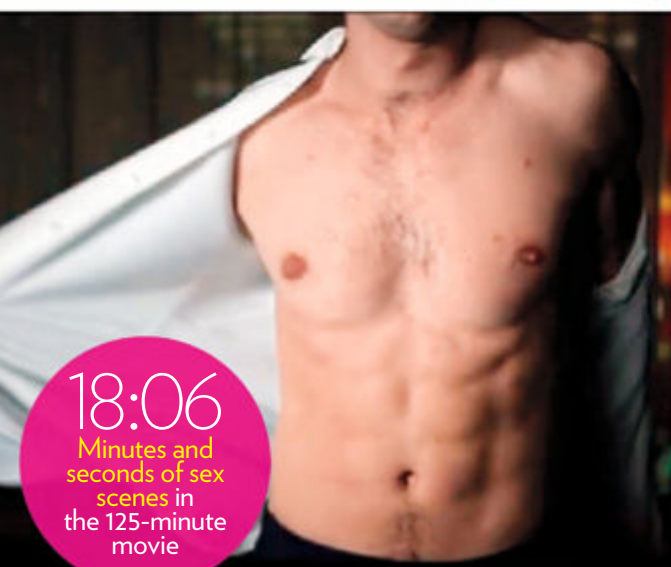

Fans lamented the loss of a certain just-too-racy sex toy and of characters such as Ana's roomie's brother. But few mourned the missing, notorious "tampon scene" from the book. "It was never even discussed," director Sam Taylor-Johnson told Variety. Another change? Ana actually knows how to use e-mail.

DID DAKOTA JOHNSON (ANA) & JAMIE DORNAN (CHRISTIAN) USE BODY DOUBLES?

Nope, that's all them—except for a closeup of Johnson's rear end during an intense whipping scene. "That was not my bum, because I didn't want to get hit with a belt!" she told the British press.

Why are some people so into bondage?

"It's about using sensations that are different from those that are more mainstream," says Fredericks. Don't look for deep-seated psychological reasons, say BDSM (bondage/discipline, dominance/submission, sadism/masochism) aficionados: "If I'm searching for why, that implies I have something to be cured from, which is not the case," says Gabosch. "I don't care why I'm into BDSM as long as my life is healthy." Those with an abusive past, like Christian Grey, should get therapy before getting kinky, she adds.

Are there going to be sequels?

They weren't officially green-lit at press time, but the movie raked in $243 million globally on its opening weekend, so expect Ana and Christian to romp again. The actors signed on for sequels, though director Taylor-Johnson didn't.

WHAT DO JOHNSON'S AND DORNAN'S FAMILIES THINK?

"We are both exceedingly proud of our daughter," Melanie Griffith and Don Johnson tell PEOPLE. (Dakota has been hoping they don't see it: "It's inappropriate!" she told Glamour.) Dornan says his wife, actress Amelia Warner, won't see the film—but it's okay if his daughter Dulcie, 1, does when she's 18: "There will be greater things to protect her from than Dad's arse on the big screen."

One Last Thing

Timothy Olyphant

The actor, 46, stars as a U.S. Marshal in the final season of FX's hit series Justified

Last time I was nervous

I'm not going to lie to you; whenever I merge onto the freeway, my shoulders raise up a little bit. I haven't had any serious accidents, but L.A. freeways always make me nervous.

Last gift I gave

I had someone over the other day, and I gave him some Pappy Van Winkle. I can't tell you where I got it. But I poured a glass for my buddy, and I think anyone who drinks their fair share of whiskey would consider that a gift.

Last time I got frustrated

Oh, I have three kids [Henry, 11, Grace, 13, and Vivian, 15]. So when was the last time I saw them, you know what I mean? They're not always frustrating; that's why we're keeping them.

Last time I cringed

Probably at some hideous injury from sports. I've gotten to the point where even if I read about them and I know I could watch the video, I don't. I cringe even thinking about it. They always say something like it was an "excruciatingly gruesome" injury. I can't do it.

Last time I was injured

That's daily. My whole life is constantly beating myself up. It's never really anything big; it's usually like, "Oh, look, I'm bleeding. How did that happen?" I don't know, it's probably connected to the Pappy.
